A POET'S DEATH SONG.

The Poem Written by Colonel Realf on the Day Previous to his Death-He Sank with the Word Failure on his Brow.

San Francisco Call, October 31st: The fo mitted suicide at Oakland on Monday night, will take place from this city on Saturday, under arrangements made by the Grand Army of the Republic. It is clear enough hat domestic troubles drove him to the act which ended his life. The woman who ar rived from the east on Saturday, and who claimed to be his lawful wife, says that Colonel Realf deserted her over four years ago, ince which time she has not lived with him he heard at different times afterward that that he had again married. Of this mar riage she claims to have no knowledge. She admits that shortly after the separation Colained as though no suit had been inst tuted. This statement agrees substantially with that of Realf's friends, who assert that, although the proved the allegations in his complaint and procured the divorce, the superior court set the verdict aside on the round that the acts proven were general, ereas the statute required specific prooefore the judgment was reversed Colonel calf, his friends admit, again married, and y this latter wife he had one child. llowing poem, found among the effects of the deceased, was written the day before he contemplated death:

For me the end has come and I am dead,
And little voluble; chatterinn daws of men
Peck at me curlously, let it then be said
By some one brave enough to speak the truth,
Here lies a great soul killed by cruel wrong.
Down all the balmy days of his fresh youth
To his bleak, desolate noon, with sw md and song
And speech that rushed up holy from the heart,
He wrought for liberty; till his own wound,
(He had been stabbed) concealed with painful art
Through wasting years, mastered him and he swooned, And sank there where you see him lying now but say that he succeeded. If he missed

He could not rightly utter to this day
What God faught in the night. Sometimes, nathless,
Fower fell upon aim, and bright tongues of fiame,
And blessings reached him from poor souls in stress;
And benedictions from black pits of shame;
And little children's love; and old men's prayers;
And a Great Hand that led him unawares. o he died rich. And if his eyes were blurred

So he died rich. And if his eyes were blurred
With thick films—silence! he is in his grave,
Greatly he suffered; greatly too, he erred;
Yet broke his heart in trying to be brave,
Nor did he wait until Freedom had become
The popular shibboleth of courtiers lips;
But smote for her when God himself seemed dumb
And all his arching skies were in cellpse,
He was a weary, but he fought his fight,
And stood for simple manhood; and was joyed
To see the august broadening of the light
And new earth's heaving heavenward from the void. void.

He loved his fellows, and their love was sweet—
Plant datsles at his head and at his feet.

The crowd, which was largely composed of Beasley men, next called on the representative elect. After several pieces of music, Mr. Beasley came forward and spoke eloquently of the Demo-cratic vote over the State, at the same time returning thanks for his own election. He of Mary Sharp's beautiful young ladies rushed forward on the upper porch, exclaiming, "Long may you live in the land of the It was a pleasant episode and added greatly to the prevailing enthusiasm.
